SCOTCH

The name whisky comes from Gaelic, 'uisge beatha' - translates to "Water of life" – originally consumed because of its medicinal properties. Based on malted barley, a single malt whisky is made from one single type of grain. Adding just a touch of water helps to bring out the aromas and character of the scotch.

COGNAC

All Cognacs are brandies but only brandies that are produced inside of the region of Cognac can be labeled with the term Cognac. 'Brandy' comes from the word brandewijn which translates to 'burned wine'. This refers to the process of heating the wine in order to increase the alcohol content. Cognac is categorized by regions and the length of time the brandy spends aging. There are 6 regions in Cognac, the best being Grande Champagne.
